BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH NO. 84

Native Son of Hopkinsville
Who Has Come to the Front.

HUGO HISGEN.

Here we have a native son of Hopkinsville who didn't come here and isn't going away. In this series of sketches it has been very seldom that a man has been found who was "to the manor born." Most of the successful men of Hopkinsville are either country boys, or business men who came from other cities in search of business opportunities.

Hugo Hisgen was born in Hopkinsville Oct. 2, 1871, the second son of Chas. H. Hisgen, a Union soldier of German descent who came here from Evansville soon after the war. His father is still living, the oldest painter in the city. For more than half a century he has lived in the city and has raised three sons to follow in his footsteps as painters of the finest inherited and acquired skill and taste.

Hugo as a boy learned under his father how to manipulate the brush, then went with the Forbes Company and held down a responsible place in their paint department for 13 years. Seven years ago, with ample experience, he became a contractor himself in all kinds of painting, decorating and papering. His business has grown so rapidly that he now works eight or ten men and has handled some of the biggest contracts in the city. One of these was the interior of Hotel Latham a year or two ago. Many fine residences all over the city attest the high quality of his workmanship.

Mr. Hisgen is married and lives with his family, consisting of a wife and one daughter, at 508 West Seventh street. In addition to his other business he conducts a fashionable boarding house. He is a member of the First Presbyterian church, the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He deserves to rank among the successful young men of the city, one of those who has won by merit alone.

TELEPHONE CO SUED.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Green have sued the Christian-Todd Telephone company and the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph company for $575 damage they claim has been done to a piece of land belonging to them near sinking Fork. It is charged employees of the companies sued entered upon the land of the defendants and cut down trees worth $75 and that they also appropriated a right of way across the land for a telephone line, set poles, strung lines and guy wires, which damaged them $500.

Elkton Pastor Resigns.

Elkton, Ky., May 26.—The Rev. C. L. Hammock has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Elkton Baptist church, to become effective July 1. He has accepted a call as pastor of the Baptist church at Mulberry, Fla.

TOLD BY FARMERS.

R. H. McGaughey, Newstead, Ky.—Strange things happened with me last week. A hen was setting on the floor of my stock barn, in one of the unused apartments, set apart for sows and pigs. A sow was turned into the pen and soon discovered the hen in her secluded corner, almost ready to hatch, and broke up her eggs. The hen continued to set around the place where the nest had been a day or two until a litter of young pigs turned up where she was expecting chicks. As soon as the sow left her bed to be fed the hen promptly took possession of the pigs and hovered them until driven off. Since that time," said Mr. McGaughey with a perfectly straight face, "the sow and hen have taken it time about mothering the pigs. Of course, you know, the pigs rely altogether on the sow for nourishment, but the hen helps to keep them warm."

A. M. Henry, Newstead, Ky.—I challenge the world to produce a more prolific mintbed than one I have in my garden. It has stood the onslaughts of Jeff Morgan's Bluegrass excursionists and other similar large delegations, but still produces a crop that seems to be growing two inches a day. I notice that Alex Casey is headed this way with a bunch of sightseers Tuesday and his itinerary passes my gate. I want all hands to stop and see this famous mint bed and tests its superior flavoring qualities."

J. T. Garnett, Casky, Ky.—"Have a little strawberry patch that contains about one-sixteenth of an acre that is doing pretty well this season. The berries began to ripen about a week and a half ago and every day since we have gathered from 15 to 30 gallons a day and the picking is still good." Let's figure a little, Tom, was the mild protest. For 10½ days 30 gallons a day would be 315 gallons on one-sixteenth of an acre. On a whole acre it would be 5040 gallons and you say "picking is still good." But he stuck to the story, even after being told that John Keeling's brag yield on one acre was 1600 gallons for the entire season. As a final proof he added: "If anybody doubts it I can show the patch the berries were gathered from."

W. E. Forgy, Pembroke, Ky.—"Got a little patch of alfalfa on one of my farms that promises a satisfactory yield. Sowed the 22nd of last August and on May 23rd cut 42,500 pounds of cured hay. When the mower went through it a close observer could see a part of the bodies of the mules above the 44-inch alfalfa. In five weeks I am going to cut the main crop, which will be a good deal better. Then in August I will cut it again before using it as a fall pasture. I expect it to last without further sowing for 25 years. I am succeeding so well with it that I will sow 20 acres more next August. So far it has cost me $11 an acre for labor and acid phosphate. I got my money back on the first crop cut on one acre. The rest will be velvet. I think I'm going to like alfalfa."

GOATING DOWN SASSAFRAS.

Christian county, which, we believe, is rated by the Federal Department of Agriculture one of the most progressive counties in America, is the scene of experiments with goats as destroyers of sassafras bushes. In some parts of Kentucky everything that is left untillied or ungrubbed reverts to sassafras. The grubbing ax is one of the most necessary farming implements. As labor gets more costly, and laborers more wary of the more taxing forms of farm labor, it becomes increasingly difficult to get the sassafras grubbed out of the pastures often enough and thoroughly enough to keep the wilderness from reclaiming its own. Grubbing sassafras is like shoveling the tide back into the ocean. Goats, which in cities are supposed generally to eat empty tomato cans, abandoned vinegar bottles and cast off metallic dishrags and corkscrews, relish a sassafras thicket as an emancipation picnic relishes rattlesnake watermelons. The Christian county farmers are substituting the goat for the grubbing ax with results as satisfactory to the goat as to the landowner. The time may come when the grubbing ax will be an interesting relic of bygone days, like the flail and the spinning wheel. Nobody has estimated the amount that is spent annually to get rid of sassafras in Kentucky, and nobody knows how much more would have to be spent if the sassafras were entirely suppressed. But it is plain enough that there is work for a herd of goats about the size of the herd of American bison at the time the first white hunter saw the first bison.

Farming becomes increasingly scientific. The farmer, who formerly went to the creek for his bath when the weather was suitable, and took it in a washbowl or a washtub at other times, now has it pumped by a hydraulic ram, which works while he sleeps. He feeds the pigs on the "cafeteria" plan, the essential principle of which is letting the pig help himself instead of encouraging him to demand the services of the owner five times a day as an untipped and unappreciated waiter. For a good many years the farmer has "hogged down" a patch of corn and sold pork directly from the cornfield instead of hauling and cribbing the corn and handing it out to the fattening hogs day by day. And now he proposes to cut down the sassafras, putting the goat to economic use after he eats the sassafras and before he eats the tin roof off of the residence or strips the fence posts of the barbed wire to appease his everlasting appetite. It used to be the idea in America that aside from the fact that two inches of a goat's tail would cure any disease the animal was of no value. But nowadays it is pointed out that all kid gloves are not made, or need not be made, of split sheepskin, and that whereas the only way to get milk out of a cow is to feed her legumes, mill concentrates and crushed grain, a milk goat can be kept on any sort of refuse, or used as an automatic sassafras swatter at a cost of nothing a year.

Many farmers' sons who resolved early in life to seek a calling less strenuous than that in which they were unwilling workers, under the parental eye and in fear of the parental cowhide, will regret their decision as they witness the progress of agriculture in the direction of scientific utilization of the forces of nature, and away from the inhuman utilization of the muscle of the rebellious son.

Now that the goat has been found to be profitable, not only to clear land but also to handle after the clearing is complete, it may be that someone will discover that the potato bug is a valuable asset and not a pesky parasite, and that it will pay to bug down the potatoes and sell the fattened bugs on the hoof instead of bugging the potatoes and digging them up after rescuing them from the bugs. A few additional discoveries, further simplifying the problems of agriculture and amplifying the opportunities of the farmer's son to go fishing would go far toward solving the continuously agitated problem of keeping the younger generation on the farm.—Courier-Journal.

Judges and Juries.

The judge pronounces the law in the case, the jury looks after, and acts upon, the facts. The verdict of the jury is supposed to be a conclusion from the facts. If it should happen to be a flagrant disregard of the facts, the judge may (and sometimes does) rebuke the jury. He may even go so far as to order a new trial of the case.
